Definition: Antiderivative The antiderivative of a function f is a differentiable function F whose derivative is equal to the original function f, that is

F'=f